

I think it is time for parents to start acting like parents again. I watched war movies, shoot'em up westerns, and murder mysteries when I was a child, and much to the surprise of all the experts, I never had the urge to blow things up, or run around killing people. What I did have were parents who knew how to say no, and the ability to teach right from wrong, and discipline when needed. It's time to stop mandating what I can watch or listen to, because of a climate of extremely bad parenting. It is also time for the government to stop tying parents hands, a whack on the butt never hurt anyone, and parents should not be threatened with punishment from the state for disciplining their children. So it falls back to you folks in the government, stay the heck out of raising children, telling us what to do in the bedroom and when to do it, and what we can watch, or listen to in our own homes!!
